

GFCO Buyer & Distributor Guide 2017

GFCO addresses critical consumer needs

- Gluten-free consumers will buy only the products they know are safe.
- The GFCO symbol reduces the need for reading labels.
- The GFCO gluten-free standard is 10 ppm or less, lower than the level defined by the FDA.
- The GF symbol on packaging is the symbol that gluten-free consumers trust.

GFCO creates a customized package for you

- Advertising to generate consumer and business-to-business awareness and sales, leveraging our large network.
- Press releases distributed to relevant consumer List Serves and local or national media, featured on the GIG social media platforms, or posted on our site (www.gfco.org).
- Additional consulting and marketing services are available.

Four Steps to Become Certified Gluten-Free by the Gluten-Free Certification Organization (GFCO):

1. Complete the Application for all products or facilities to be considered for certification.

2. Upon review of the application, you will receive a quote for certification and audit expenses.

    a. Audit expenses (estimated inspection and travel) are due before audit is scheduled.
    b. Annual certification fee is based on risk assessment of ingredients, manufacturing plant and a number of other factors. GFCO does not assess fees per UPC or unit certified.

3. A GFCO Auditor will conduct an initial visit of the facility to observe the operations and determine feasibility of certification.

4. A contract is prepared for your company. When accepted, signed and returned to the GFCO, a certificate is sent.

GFCO is the industry's choice!

Certified GF® Gluten-Free

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE:

This Buyer and Distributor Guide is a tool to assist you in your search for gluten-free certified products available on the market today. It contains three 3 sections, described below:

The "Certified Manufacturer" section is useful for new companies looking for a co-packer or private label manufacturer. It lists the facilities that are currently certified to produce gluten-free products for other companies.

The next two sections, "Certified Products by Brand" and "Certified Products by Category", list certified products in two different search methods, as titled. The first is sorted alphabetically by brand name, and the next is sorted by product category. Both sections are useful for retailers, buyers and distributors as a means to verify certification and/or to find new gluten-free products to offer.

This listing is current as of January 31, 2017. However, because of GFCO's high demand and rapid growth, the list of certified products changes daily. For the MOST RECENT certified product list, please visit our website at www.gfco.org or contact our office at (253) 218-2956.

FAQ'S

Gluten-Free Certification Organization (GFCO)

What is GFCO's standard for gluten?
GFCO's standard is 10 ppm or less gluten in finished products.

What is the cost for certification?
The costs listed on the right side of this page are involved in GFCO certification. There are no other fees or charges to companies for certification.

Is certification given to products?
Yes. Individual products meeting GFCO standards can be certified. Manufacturers producing certified products undergo an audit in each location certified products are produced.

Can a manufacturing plant be certified?
Yes. Manufacturers who produce gluten-free products can certify the facility. Certified manufacturers may produce GFCO-certified products for their clients if specified contract terms are met.

Is an audit required for all my manufacturing plants?
Any location that produces GFCO-certified products must be audited. The audit frequency is determined by the risks associated with the ingredients, manufacturing facility and products. Manufacturing plants will have a minimum annual audit, but may be audited more frequently. Audits may be announced or unannounced.

How often is a product inspected or tested?
The number of times an inspector is in the plant to review processes depends on a number of factors including the products being certified, the type of plant, etc. Risk of potential for cross-contamination with gluten is established for each ingredient in the final product, as well as the processing aids. Products may be randomly tested in the plant or sent out for independent testing as requested by GFCO.

How often is testing of equipment required?
Testing of equipment is based on identifying and testing high risk areas of the equipment. GFCO encourages the use of test kits testing at 10 ppm or less for testing equipment.

What testing methods does GFCO recommend?
GIG provides companies with a document of testing kits and methods that have been GFCO-approved for use as part of our certification program. GFCO encourages the use of third-party validated test methods and certified labs. GIG does not endorse a specific testing method or lab.

Do ingredients have to be tested?
GFCO assigns a risk assessment to all ingredients. High risk ingredients are required to be tested prior to use in a certified product. Some materials, such as grain products, may require increased testing if they are not certified gluten-free by a GFCO-recognized certification program, before being used in production.

Audit fees

An annual audit is required for each plant producing certified gluten-free products. A flat rate of $600 is charged for US audits. This rate may be reduced for companies with multiple plants. Applications and desk audits are free of charge.

Auditor travel expenses

GFCO makes every effort to group audits together, and when applicable will combine GF audits with other audits (HACCP, GFSI, GMO, Organic, etc) in order to reduce cost to companies.

Licensing/ Certification

A flat rate is charged for each certification and is not based on the number of SKU's, Brand sales, etc. GFCO extends a Small Business Offer to small companies with 5 or less products. However, the Small Business Offer uses a 'per SKU' pricing matrix rather than a flat rate.

Even though USDA products are not required to comply with FALCPA, it's estimated that 80 to 90 % of these products voluntarily comply. If you see a "contains" statement or other indication that a USDA-regulated product is complying with FALCPA, then you can simply look for the word "wheat."

If there is any doubt about whether a product is complying with FALCPA labeling, the following ingredients may be derived from wheat and need to be avoided or investigated:

- modified food starch
- starch
- dextrin

ALLERGEN VS VOLUNTARY STATEMENTS ON LABELS

Allergen statements on labels are required for the "top 8" allergens. These must begin with the word "Contains." This means the product directly contains said allergen. It will be found in the ingredient list as well.

Voluntary statements are those that begin "May contain" or "Manufactured in a facility that also processes" and are NOT required by the FDA.

As a voluntary statement, its intent is to protect IgE allergic persons, however it is widely known that many companies will use these in a couple ways:

1) to let consumers know there are allergens in the plant ("may contain is used to indicate that the ingredient is not a part of the product, but is in the plant and for those with IgE allergies they may want to avoid this product due to airborne dust) or
2) to cover themselves against lawsuits.

There are no standards for these statements; they are voluntary so no manufacturer has to use them.

Experts in celiac disease and the gluten-free diet do not recommend that gluten-free consumers use these statements to determine safety of the products. The position of the Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics is to disregard these voluntary statements. When it comes to gluten-free products they are meaningless. Labeling laws in Canada and soon in the US will regulate the term gluten-free for products.

[1] Oats are inherently gluten-free, however since they are typically grown and processed in close proximity to wheat, they can easily become cross-contaminated with gluten. However, some growers/manufacturers are now selling certified gluten-free oats.

[2] "Malt" includes ingredients using malt, such as malt vinegar and barley malt extract. However if you see the word "malt" used in a compound word such as "maltodextrin," this does not indicate the presence of malt and the product is safe to consume.

Information provided by the Gluten Intolerance Group of North America, a 501c3 non-profit organization operating at 31214 124th Ave SE, Auburn, WA 98092. (253) 218-2956 www.gluten.org

January 2016

Check ingredient lists every time you shop since manufacturers may change ingredients in a product at any time.

GLUTEN-FREE LABEL READING

When shopping for packaged foods, always read ingredient lists carefully to determine whether or not an item is gluten-free.
If any of the following are on an ingredient list, the item is not gluten-free:

- Wheat
- Rye
- Barley
- Oats unless the oats are certified gluten-free[1]
- Malt[2]
- Brewer's yeast

Identifying rye, barley, oats, malt and brewer's yeast is straightforward, since these are virtually always listed by their recognizable names. But looking for wheat can be a little trickier. This is because derivatives of wheat, such as "modified food starch," also contain gluten.

LOOKING FOR WHEAT

Label reading for wheat has become much easier since the "Food Allergen Labeling and Consumer Protection Act" (FALCPA) was passed in 2004. This regulation requires that the top 8 allergens be clearly identified, wheat being one of them. This means that derivatives of wheat such as "modified food starch" must clearly indicate that "wheat" is the source. "Wheat" can either appear in parentheses in the ingredient list or in a separate "contains" statement.

GFCO LABELED PRODUCTS

GFCO maintains a strict standard for all of the products we certify of 10ppm gluten or less. Every product is manufactured in a facility that undergoes ongoing audits by GFCO's 3rd party, trained auditors and undergoes rigorous testing of ingredients, equipment, and finished products. These testing results are logged and submitted to GFCO as a part of certification. You can be assured that any product certified by GFCO is safe for those with celiac disease or any other gluten related disorder.

FDA AND USDA

FALCPA applies to the majority of packaged food products, those regulated by the FDA. However, products regulated by the USDA are not required to comply with FALCPA. The USDA regulates meat, poultry and egg products, and mixed food products that generally contain more than three percent raw meat or two percent or more cooked meat or poultry (e.g. soups, chilis, frozen entrees).
